Dutch Farm Youth To Replace U. S. Boy

Parents of Flier He Buried in War Offer Home.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y.—Twenty-two-year-old Hans Kloosterman arrived here recently "to take the place" of an American flier he buried three years ago near his Holland farm house.

His arrival ended a chain of events that began on a late afternoon in March, 1944, when a crippled Liberator bomber crashed into a windmill close to the little town of Andega in the northern Netherlands.

Hans, only 19 at the time and already a veteran member of the Dutch underground, watched the big plane wobble over his home and crash. He jumped on his bicycle and rushed to the aid of the 11-man crew as they staggered from the crumpled bomber.

With the help of fellow members of the underground, all but the two pilots who were seriously injured, were spirited away before the arrival of German patrols.

The two pilots, however, Hans explained, needed medical attention and could not be moved. One, John Kendrick, a Mississippian, had both legs amputated in a German hospital and the other, Stephen Peter Judd of Cannonsville, N. Y., died a few hours after the crash and was buried in the town of Wartena.

Hans, who participated in the burial, exchanged letters with the dead pilot's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Judd, and promised to take care of their son's grave. In later correspondence, the Judds learned that Hans was a dairy farmer and in gratitude for his kindness invited him to live on their 90-acre dairy farm near Binghamton.

He was met at the pier by Richard Judd, brother of the dead pilot and an ex-marine of the fourth division.

Discover Microphones in British Moscow Office

MOSCOW. — An authoritative British source said that several microphones had been found in a building occupied by British officials in Moscow. The source denied reports published in the United States that six new Soviet microphones had been discovered in the British embassy —either during or before the foreign ministers' conference.

1,800-Carat Turquoise Nugget Discovered in Colorado Mine

DENVER.—Fred Jones, Colorado mines commissioner, has on display in his office a 10-pound, 1,800-carat turquoise nugget, believed to be the largest in the world.

Wallace King of Manassa, Colo., brought the nugget to Denver. King found it in a mine near Manassa which he leases from his father, Charles King of Albuquerque, N. M.

Discover That Measles Acts As Cure for Another Illness

CHICAGO. — A case of measles may help a child recover from nephrosis, a kidney disease, two Cincinnati researchers reported.

Dr. Richard W. Blumberg and Dr. Harold A. Cassady of the University of Cincinnati College of Medicine, reported the recovery of two and improvement in three nephrosis cases after the children had become infected with measles.

They said the measles infections were "more effective in causing abatement of the kidney disease" than any curative agent they had used.

Nephrosis is a disease in which the child is unable to retain albumin, a protein necessary to cell building. The albumin is lost because of the action of salts in the body.
